

PROTOCOLS IN THE CLASSROOM

I'm excited to use Text Rendering   with my senior English classes as they compose their college-application essays. This protocol will allow students a safe framework for receiving feedback, as their classmates won't make direct value judgments or critiques of the essays. Rather, readers will highlight what resonated for them in each essay, in effect giving writers a realistic sense of the image of them the admissions committees will likely draw from their reading.

provided by Tony Hernandez and his co-facilitators, I believe that we are giant leaps closer to meeting the goals and outcomes we desire with this session. The session evaluations reflected that 87% of the participants felt the session and its contents were very effective or effective and their knowledge of the topic increased.

One participant appreciated Tony's ability as a facilitator to personally relate to the topic. When asked for additional comments about the session, this participant said, "Respect and honor over charity – it is better to stand in solidarity with, not over others. I really appreciated hearing Antonio's story. He was a vulnerable leader in action."

Another participant appreciated the authentic facilitation style, stating, "This was a great session, and I'm surprised it was the first time presented by these facilitators in this format. They were genuine in their approach, and I think that increased everyone's comfort level in terms of sharing openly. Amazing what you can learn about an individual when you listen to them!"

As we look to planning the 2015 session of Understanding Differences, Leadership Lancaster has a great foundation on which to build because of the style of facilitation used last year.

(Back to Tony:)

This experience came from a collective effort and I have gained so much from the people who have helped me in my endeavor for continued growth and development. First, to NSRF National Facilitator Ursina Hastings-Heinz and NSRF intern Jim McKean for a dynamic CFG New Coaches Open Training. To Kate Zimmerman and Deb Rohrer for their support and encouragement. Finally, to my co-facilitators, Shayna Watson and Angelique Arroyo, for the beauty of our synergy together. 🍃

ENLIGHTENMENT AT THE HEART OF WHAT WE DO

In early 2014, the logo for the National School Reform Faculty underwent a redesign to make it more contemporary and useful at small scale. The leaf in the NSRF logo is now more stylized, but the original was based on an actual, heart-shaped leaf from a Bodhi tree.

"Bodhi" is both a Sanskrit (ancient Indian language) and Pali (Ancient Thai language) word that translates as "enlightenment" or, more accurately, "awakened."

It is our hope that by working under the shade and structure of NSRF protocols and activities, we all achieve greater wisdom and clarity that we can share with other learners of all ages.
